JURNAL ORGANISASI DAN MANAJEMEN

A. BACKGROUND

In recent decades, democracy has developed. Democracy is not only interpreted as a rule of law, but there are other dynamic aspects in applying democratic understanding. In the digital era, political, social and economic rights are the realm of democracy which continues to be fought for the welfare of mankind. On the other hand, the principle of government for the people as one of the principles of democracy in addition to the government of the people and government by the people, must be voiced continuously. The principle of government for the people is related to public accountability. In principle, everything that is done by the government or not done by the government must be accountable to citizens.

Today, democracy broadens its scope in economic and social dimensions. Modern countries regulate the matter of taxes, minimum wages, pensions, general education, insurance, preventing or reducing unemployment and poverty so that the State has a role in regulating such a way that the existence of the State is not disturbed by the economic crisis and crisis. Entrepreneurship is not only limited to the economic field but also extends to sociopreneurship.

In the current digital era, democracy and public accountability are supported by the presence of an information society that is supported by the development of information technology that has created a "new space" that is artificial and virtual or known as cyberspace. Cyberspace has transferred various human activities (political, social, economic, cultural, spiritual and sexual) in the real world into various forms of artificial substitution, including sociopreneurship, presentation of information, data, financial reports, and relations between the State and citizens. On this basis, the Faculty of Law, Social Sciences, and Political Sciences (FHHISIP) Open University took the initiative to hold an international seminar with the theme "Democracy And Public Accountability In Digital Era".
